LIMM Research Associate John Kochiss recorded this interview with Mr. Tucker at the William Rudolph Oyster House on the grounds of the Long Island Maritime Museum in West Sayville on 20 June 1979.

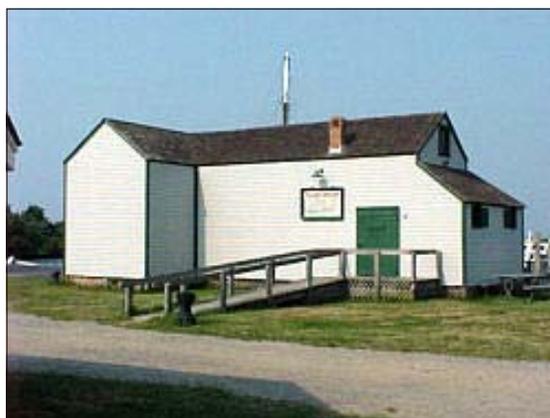

TAPE: John Tucker, ROH

Contents:

- Inside the William Rudolph Oyster House, Mr. Tucker recounts a typical day in the oyster house:
 - how oysters were opened, sorted, stored, cleaned, packaged, etc. (0:00-14:00).
- Mr. Tucker describes the floor plan of the Rudolph Oyster House, explaining what activities took place there during the processing of oysters (14:00-28:00).

All times are approximate indications of subject/topic areas.

William Rudolph Oyster House, now a National Historic Landmark, is a permanent exhibit on the grounds of the Long Island Maritime Museum.
